

Adapting a federal standard on telephone privacy should not be implimented. Since I signed up with the Attorney Generals "Do Not Call" list in Indiana, I have received less than 5 "unavailable/out of area" calls per week. I was receiving more than 15 per day before signing up on with the "Do Not Call" list. I think that each state should mandate their own regulations and monitor them locally. By "locking out" these disruptive unwanted calls, my family can spend more time together without having to haggle and eventually hang up on pestering telemarketers.
